Rectification and nested counterfactuals

The non-identity problem threatens to undermine the possibility of rectifying historical injustices. When the existence of the descendants of the victims of injustice is dependent on the injustice having taken place, it is not possible to rectify the injustice by bringing about a situation that corresponds to what would have happened had the injustice not taken place. This paper uses nested counterfactuals to develop a solution to the non-identity problem.

Alle Interessierten, insbesondere Studierende, sind herzlich eingeladen.
